I've linked all of my webpage together allowing free roam from any html you find yourself on. This makes access to different webpages simple and aesthetically pleasing.

Home Page Wireframe

I wanted something very simple for my website as I firmly believe simple looks are the best. So I planned for my wireframe to be super simple repeating the same layout for different pages. I viewed a lot of portfolio websites online and although they were simply amazing, I decided that some of them were overly complicated for my style and approach. The colours I've chosen follow this minimalist style because they are all neutral. Grey, black, dark grey, very light yellow. These all add to the calm and soothing aesthetic of my portfolio.

Home Page

My styling intends to soothe the audience and make them feel comfortable with my website. There isn't an overtly complicated string of components which can be overwhelming at times. Rather, the simplicity of this website branches to a large audience as it targets all age demographics. I've also added a contact me form on my contact me page which will engage the audience and allow them to communicate with me. Overall, the simple but engaging components of this website come together to form a aesthetically pleasing and simple portfolio.
